A conventional optical focusing system of an optical reading apparatus often incorporates a lens for focusing light from an optical reading device on a linear object, such as, for example, a bar code. The lens is a self-focused optical member, such as a plastic lens or a glass lens, having a focusing property. The lens is generally formed by injection molding a resin. However, the resin is generally selected such that it has a low light-transmittance, and a low refractive index. Therefore, the lens is of low aperture efficiency and is not effective in concentrating light. The lens tends to be formed as a converging lens. The light beam incident on the lens should be focused to a smaller spot in order to read bar codes of small widths. In addition, the lens is disadvantageously formed larger than a desired size. The lens has a plane front surface. Since the front surface is plane, a light beam incident on the lens is reflected as scattered light. When scattered light is reflected, an intensity of the light beam is reduced, or an intensity distribution of the light beam is distorted, due to refraction when the scattered light is reflected from the front surface of the lens. As a result, when the intensity of the light beam is adjusted to be as uniform as possible, the intensity distribution of the light beam is distorted and the bar codes are distorted. Russian Hacks Find Governors Blogs The Russians may have intercepted some email communication from Democratic Party officials saying that Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump is the likely winner. That's the information that was uncovered in an investigation into a hack of the Democratic National Committee, according to a report published Tuesday by The Washington Post. (We'll have the story all day at NBCNews.com.) That's d4474df7b8
