
monitoring (such as PagerDuty, Pingdom, New Relic, etc) and you are using the free Log2Sonic license (which only allows remote monitoring by your customers), then you have a dilemma. Log2Sonic has great functionality, however, it has not been developed in recent years and cannot log remote monitoring systems. You can download the free Log2Sonic license from the Log2Sonic site. However you have to make sure you are not logged into the remote monitoring site using the same email/login credentials you use to log into Ranger. If you are logged into the remote monitoring site using the same credentials, you can choose not to be notified of any events. This can be done by changing the site preferences under the “Notification” option. However, this option will block you from being able to receive event alerts from the remote monitoring service provider. If you have a business account with a remote monitoring provider, you can purchase a “Business Account”. With this you will be able to log into the remote monitoring service provider with your business email/login credentials. This will give you the ability to monitor your own business servers and software. You can choose if you want to be notified of events

Adoption of the European Union's General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR) is approaching a "watershed moment" in global cybersecurity, a leading consultant said today. GDPR could potentially be a game changer for cybersecurity, said Kris Wouters, vice president of marketing at Threat Stack. "It creates a new, more comprehensive framework for regulation and addresses the range of security issues related to the processing of data," he told TechNewsWorld. "No one knows what the full scope will be, but there's a lot of confusion out there because it's still unclear if data collection is going to be prohibited or if disclosure is prohibited. It's also unclear what will be required in the disclosure situation." There's a lot of confusion out there because it's still unclear if data collection is going to be prohibited or if disclosure is prohibited. Kris Wouters, Threat Stack The widespread lack of information, he said, has been a concern for the security community. "That creates a situation where we're all speculating what we can and can't do." Wouters sees three possible outcomes, and while it's unlikely that any of them will apply to every business, it's possible that the regulations will create a major regulatory shift for the security industry. It could be a watershed moment, he
